

SHEET 1

ADMINISTRATIVELY CONFIDENTIAL

TYPES OF PROVISIONS

1. Requirements that executive agencies "come into agreement" with committees or subcommittees or their chairmen before taking action authorized by law.
2. Requirements that the President obtain the advice and concurrence of certain bodies or officers, including those composed of executive branch and legislative branch officials, before taking action
3. Limitations on the President's appointment prerogatives by requiring the President to appoint executive branch officials from certain panels or boards proposed by special interest groups, or otherwise attempting to limit the sources from which the President may seek advice.
4. Limitations on the causes for removal of officials performing executive functions, which thereby limit the President's power to exercise control over those officials through removal, or providing for congressional removal, by resolution, of executive branch officials.
5. The imposition of reporting requirements and/or waiting periods (sometimes with options to waive the waiting period) which must elapse before executive branch actions can take effect.
6. Permitting congressional action by resolution so as to prevent or circumvent the Presidential veto.

INFORMATION REQUIRED ON EACH PROVISION
BY APRIL 1, 1965

1. Identify the Public Law which contains a provision falling into one of the categories shown on Sheet 1, its U. S. Code citation, and quote the provision.
2. Provide any pertinent background information on the provision.
3. Explain the actual procedures followed by the agency and Congress in administering the provision. This would include, for instance, in the case of a reporting requirement with a waiver option, information on the number of executive actions reported, the number "disapproved," and the number of times the waiting period has been waived.
4. Indicate any expiration date for the provision.
5. Indicate the agency's views as to any support for, or opposition to an Administration proposal to repeal the provision in question, and factors, if any, bearing upon the timing of a proposal for repeal.
